CMV Cell Phone Rule Compliance Agreement

The Department of Transportation recently announced a final rule restricting the use of hand-held mobile telephones by commercial motor vehicle (CMV) drivers operating in interstate commerce. Specifically, this rule prohibits a CMV driver from reaching for, holding and dialing a mobile telephone in order to conduct a voice communication while driving. Use of compliant mobile telephones (e.g. hands-free) is still allowed.

*States that issue Commercial Drivers Licenses (CDLs) will enforce the new serious traffic violation of using a hand-held mobile telephone while driving a CMV. For CMV drivers operating in interstate commerce, the rule disqualifies drivers convicted of using a hand-held telephone. After the first conviction, a driver will face a civil penalty; the second conviction within 3 years of the first results in a 60 day disqualification in addition to a civil penalty. The disqualification period doubles if a driver is convicted a third time within the 3 year period. In limited cases of emergency, CMV drivers can use their hand-held mobile phones to communicate with law enforcement officers.
